Sydney, Australia: The Sydney Film Festival today declared the completion of the 55th festival, with its inaugural Official Competition for the Sydney Film Prize, a success.

Screening over 19 days from 4 – 22 June 2008, the festival realised 130,000 attendances and took in excess of AUD$1.13 million. SFF President Virginia Gordon said “This is a strong and encouraging result. In increasing box office at the same time as achieving the global recognition that has accompanied the Sydney Film Prize for ‘audacious and cutting edge filmmaking’, we have realised our principal objectives in staging the inaugural competition for the festival”.

Sydney Film Festival 2008 has put filmmakers and their films at the heart of the festival. The festival hosted 48 international guests and 122 Australian filmmakers who introduced their films, participated in Q&As, discussion panels and industry events. The presence of the filmmakers treading the red carpet ensured many informal opportunities to mingle with audiences, as well as the industry. The warm response to the festival guests was apparent in the increased interest in both the question and answer forums as well as the program talks series.

“We are pleased that the delivery of the first year’s competition under the artistic direction of Festival Director Clare Stewart has increased the festival’s profile and relevance internationally, whilst enriching the program and festival experience for both audience and film industry alike. The Board congratulates Clare on her strong program in this first year of the Sydney Film Prize”, President Virginia Gordon said.

The Official Competition was established through the support of $1.8M over four years from the New South Wales Government with a substantial cash prize of AUD $60,000 generously provided by SFF Principal Sponsor Hunter Hall Investment Management. The Sydney Film Prize acknowledges ‘audacious, cutting-edge and courageous’ filmmaking and was presented by Jury President Gillian Armstrong at the Sydney Opera House to Steve McQueen’s Hunger, selected from 12 films in the Official Competition.

“Awards and the critical reviews they attract fulfil a hugely important role in the future business of a film like Hunger and I hope the Sydney Film Festival and its Official Competition goes from strength to strength” commented Laura Hastings-Smith, producer of Hunger, who attended the festival with Director Steve McQueen and fellow producer Robin Gutch.

“The Official Competition provided a significant focal point for the festival, with double the international filmmakers in attendance and some real business opportunities created through the aligned industry program” said Festival Director, Clare Stewart, speaking from Sydney today. “In addition to enhancing our program the Official Competition increased the glamour factor for audiences and filmmakers, and created heightened levels of excitement and anticipation over consecutive nights of red carpet gala screenings”.

Consistent with recent survey results from the (former) Film Finance Corporation, Australian films proved very popular with audiences, with feature films Men’s Group and Son of a Lion; documentaries Salute, River of No Return, Glass: a portrait of Philip in twelve parts and Playing in the Shadows, and short films Wanja and My Rabbit Hoppy amongst the top-rating films at the festival. Popular program strands included the topical Apocalypse Again, a collection of documentary and feature films about the conflict in Iraq; Kids’ Films including Where is Winky’s Horse?, the sequel to last year’s Audience Award winner; and the retrospective program From Kerr to Eternity.
The introduction of an industry program that augments the Official Competition saw overall film industry participation increase by 62%, engaging 520 industry guests. Media participation also increased, with a 20% rise on 2007 accreditations. The introduction of free lunchtime talks with filmmakers visiting for the Official Competition saw the turnout at free public events double.

The success continues beyond the festival for Canadian film Fugitive Pieces. Immediately following its win in the SFF’s World Movies Channel Audience Awards, the film confirmed an Australian distribution deal with Aztec International. “Receiving the Audience Award from the Sydney Film Festival is a great honour and a perfect capper to a wonderful overall experience. The enthusiastic response of the local audience was very moving to experience and was no doubt an important contributing factor in the subsequent acquisition of the film for Australian theatrical release”, said director of Fugitive Pieces, Jeremy Podeswa, who was a guest at the festival.

The Sydney Film Festival looks forward to building on the success of this year with its 56th edition and second Sydney Film Prize in 2009.

Sydney Film Festival screens feature films, documentaries, short films and animations across the city at State Theatre, Greater Union George Street Cinemas, Metro Theatre and Dendy Opera Quays. The festival is a major event on the New South Wales cultural calendar and is one of the world's longest running film festivals. In 2008, SFF introduced the inaugural Official International Competition, a FIAPF-accredited competition for ‘new directions in film’, which rewards courageous and audacious filmmaking.

The 55th Sydney Film Festival opened on Wednesday 4 June 2008, with the Official Competition red carpet galas screening for the first 12 days, culminating in an Awards ceremony on Monday 16 June. The Closing Night Gala was on Saturday 21 June with the festival finishing on Sunday 22 June.
